"Sierra Solitude" Dave Sellers
— The southern Sierra mountains are defined by their altitude and ruggedness. They overlook the arid Great Basin but due to heavy snow accumulation during the winter months,

they are graced with an abundance of small lakes and scenic little creeks. These waters are home to perhaps the most beautiful trout in the world, the Golden Trout. When I spend time here, I am usually alone backpacking.

This is, to me, the most fitting way to enjoy such beauty! —

"Late Summer in the High Country"

Dave Sellers

The most direct access to Wright Lakes basin is via Shepherd pass. The trailhead is west of Independence, Ca and is, at 6000 feet, still in the Owens Valley. That changes quickly as 11 miles later, the pass itself is 12,000 feet.

The Forest Service describes this route into the high country as "demanding" but

Upper Kern Tributary Golden-Rainbow

It is more commonly known as one of the most difficult backpacking trails in the Sierras. What keeps me coming back to this trail again and again is the solitude, beauty and, of course, the fishing. Once over the pass, the country is relatively mild with two drainages west of the Kern River Canyon - Wright and Wallace Lakes basin. The sketching and painting opportunities are as abundant as the golden trout.
